

ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION (ADR)

Courtrooms rarely provide the preferred venue to resolve lawsuits. Costing significant funds, resources and time, a dragged-out courtroom trial could take weeks or months, taking important company decision-makers out of the office and dragging them into the courtroom. At the same time, clients and their opposing attorneys often cannot see eye-to-eye either in settlement discussions, and need unbiased, independent help with seeking a solution.

That happy medium between settlement and courtroom trial is where alternative dispute resolution (ADR) lives. Barley Snyder's team of practical yet aggressive mediators and arbitrators has helped clients achieve favorable, amicable and cost-saving solutions that can save business relationships.

Barley's ADR professionals help resolve complex matters in areas such as:

Barley's ADR team works in two major types of ADR:

Mediation

Consider mediation an invited intervention. Parties locked in a dispute who want to avoid protracted litigation call on an unbiased, third-party mediator to listen to both sides of the argument, then help those parties reach a resolution make a recommendation to both sides about how to proceed in the matter.

Arbitration

Arbitration is a legally binding ruling from an unbiased third party to settle a dispute between two entities.

Some other forms of ADR the firm is qualified in include out-of-court trials, discovery dispute resolution, settlement conferences and early case evaluation.
