Lancaster, Pa. - Barley Snyder has added another attorney to the firm, continuing its growth throughout central Pennsylvania and northern Maryland.

Ryan Logan, who is now an associate in the firm's Litigation Practice Group, started at Barley Snyder on May 22. Logan became a certified patent agent in 2014 while he was still at Widener Law School in Harrisburg. He graduated from Virginia Tech University with a bachelor's degree in biochemistry.

At Widener, he was an editor of the Widener Journal of Law, Economics and Race, and he is a licensed patent attorney.

"Barley Snyder is the kind of welcoming atmosphere I had been looking for in a firm," Logan said of his choice to come Barley Snyder. "I'm very grateful for this opportunity to come to this firm, and appreciate the opportunity the firm has given me."

The addition is the fifth new attorney the firm has added in the last four months and the ninth new attorney since September. That brings the number of attorneys at the firm to 79, an all-time high, according to managing partner Jeff Lobach.

"Adding a quality talent like Ryan is part of our overall plan to grow organically," Lobach said. "We'll keep saying it: We're going to grow in ways that we believe are best for the future of the firm. Hiring Ryan is a perfect example of that."
